

2ND ARSO PRESIDENT FORUM MADE IN AFRICA CONFERENCE & EXPO

SAZ successfully hosts ARSO Conference

THE Standards Association of Zimbabwe successfully hosted the African Organisation of Standardisation (ARSO) second edition of the President's Forum where delegates from 36 member States converged to discuss standards on continent.

ARSO president and Standards Association of Zimbabwe (SAZ) director general, Dr Eve Gadzikwa, set the tone for the conference where she underscored the need for standards to foster trade, inter Africa regional inter-gratation and consumer protection.

Gadzikwa urged member states to manufacture quality products that would be accepted internationally.

"Manufacturing sectors of African countries must be supported to realise their contribution to economic growth," she said welcoming the re-admission of Morocco in the African Union, anticipating its ARSO membership.

She announced that 2017 is the African Year of Quality Infrastructure.

"As the host country of ARSO President's Forum and Made in Africa Expo 2017, Zimbabwe is excited to announce the launch of the MADE IN AFRICA magazine, a new quarterly publication which will carry success stories promoting "Made in Africa" products," Dr Gadzikwa said.

"The African Union (AU) has adopted 2017 as the year of African Quality Infrastructure to speed up the continent's drive towards a development agenda,"

"The magazine is a product that recognised the immense challenge ahead to achieving integration, industrialisation and commitments."

"The potential to export uniquely African products is attractive because it presents the continent with an opportunity to participate in the global market, but it also sets clear intentions to create new jobs. Africa has a huge number of SMEs which are creating jobs on the continent. Scaling up Africa's integration agenda and repositioning the role of standards is important for this young continent to secure a much larger market at home and abroad. Increasing its economies of scale requires greater pace to be taken towards industrial development which will result in cheaper products for its growing population," she added.

ARSO secretary general, Hermogene Nsengimana urged other African countries to join the organisation in order to improve standardisation on the continent.

He noted that only 36 countries out of a total of 55 AU countries were members and bemoaned that African countries preferred trade with Europe and not with other African countries.

ARSO, director, Reuben Gisore implored African countries to value standardisation issues, noting that while there was political will from African Heads of States, technical people were found lacking as they are not adequately driving the standardisation agenda aggressively.

This has translated into low intra-Africa trade that ranges between 13 to 15 percent as compared to 70 percent for EU countries.

"Some of the benefits of being an ARSO member are that, standardisation will assist member states in fostering better utilisation of resources and reducing barriers to trade," said Gisore.

"There will be no need to reinvent the wheel in standardisation as they will already be ARSO framework to guide the standardisation process," he added.

ARSO member, Senegal has 509 standards that relate to certification of fruits and vegetables, dairy products, grains and cereals which have been domesticated by the country.

Senegal representative, Sarr Barama said belonging to the continental body helped the country craft its own local standards.

"Some of the standards were adopted from ARSO, while others were borrowed from ECOWAS, a move that necessitates acceptance of the goods and services in the region," said Barama.

Industry and Commerce Minister, Mike Bimha said Zimbabwe was in the process of developing the National Quality Infrastructure which will assist in conforming quality standards to international standards.

"A developed quality infrastructure is an essential prerequisite for African countries to have access to international markets in accordance with modern principles.

"Even if many products and services produced in developing countries are of high quality, it is nevertheless difficult for developing countries to market their products and services internationally, if the national quality infrastructure is weak and functioning below par according to international best practice.

Industry and Commerce Minister Mike Bimha with ARSO president Dr Eve Gadzikwa enjoying a lighter moment.

Economic integration, industrialisation and transformation agenda

THE main objective of the African Organisation for Standardisation (ARSO) President Forum is to create opportunity to review the ARSO programmes and membership mobilisation to facilitate the main mandate of ARSO in facilitating Intra-African Trade and economic development and using standardisation a tool for facilitating Africa's industrialisation, transformation and integration through increased manufacturing, value addition and innovation.

ARSO background summary

The question of Africa's regional integration has preoccupied many African leaders since the early years of independence.

Many have viewed it as a tool for promoting economic growth and sustainable development and improving the living standards of the African people, and as in the case of early African leaders, today, the subject of the African Integration, Industrialisation and lately Transformation has been a subject of African leaders and policy makers in equal measure, with a strong believe that Africa's development will be achieved only through the unity of its people.

Historically, regional integration has been a core element of African countries' development strategies since their independence.

The Africa-wide development agenda, as championed by the African Union (AU), is based on regional integration and the formation of an African Economic Community (AEC).

This was laid out in the 1980 Lagos Plan of Action for the Economic Development of Africa and the Abuja Treaty of 1991.

The Africa regional integration roadmap considers the Regional Economic Communities (RECs) as the building blocks of the AEC.

Although regional agreements may vary, all have the objective of reducing trade barriers among member countries and achieving a more industrialised and prosperous continent.

At its 18th Ordinary Session in January 2012 in Addis Ababa, on the theme "Boosting Intra-African Trade," the Assembly of Heads of State and Government of the AU adopted a decision and a declaration that reflected the strong political commitment of African leaders to accelerate and deepen the continent's integration.

The Heads of State and Government agreed on a roadmap for establishing a Continental Free Trade Area (CFTA) by the indicative date of 2017.

The CFTA is a priority initiative and is one of the pillars for the implementation of the Agenda 2063 aspiration for a prosperous Africa based on inclusive growth and sustainable development and industrialization.

Various reports by UNCTAD and UNECA show that African countries do not trade much with each other, meaning, they have been unable to fully harness the synergies and complementarities of their economies and take full advantage of the economies of scale and other benefits (such as income and employment generation) that greater market integration would have provided.

The production and export structures of most African economies are geared to primary commodities such as minerals, timber, coffee, cocoa, and other raw materials, for which demand is externally oriented.

Most lack the industrial capacity for diversified manufactured goods to support trade within regional markets.

Alexis Akwagyiram, in an article, Made in Africa: Is manufacturing taking off on the continent?

BBC Africa (2014) points out that several African countries have enjoyed economic growth in recent years but there are fears that a failure to develop manufacturing could prove to be costly.

He points out that "Made in China" is a stamp that is ubiquitous and can be found on a wide range of objects — anything from T-shirts and shoes, to watches and televisions — worldwide.

The same is true of labels showing that an object originated in Taiwan or Vietnam.

Standardisation key to intra-Africa trade growth

Industry and Commerce Minister Mike Bimha

Nyasha Chingono

THE recently held African Organisation of Standardisation (ARSO) 2nd President's Forum and Expo in Victoria Falls brought together member states as issues of standardisation of African products took centre stage.

The conference singled out standards as the panacea to the continent's trade challenges.

Member states agreed on the need of standardisation to foster intra Africa trade after presentations revealed plummeting trade within the continent.

Intra-Africa trade represents a meagre 10 percent, compared to 70 percent for the European Union where there are 27 countries.

Africa also falls short of Asia which has 52 percent, 50 percent within North America and 20 percent for South America.

According to the World Trade Organisation (WTO) 2015 report, exports only constituted 18 percent of Africa's foreign receipts.

With Africa's combined consumer spending projected at US$2,2 trillion in 2030 according to the African Development Bank (AFDB), the ARSO conference made a resolution to intensify the drive towards standardisation.

The conference also addressed the issues of costs related to trade which are double in Africa than in other continents.

Costs of moving goods from one port to another in Africa have been a major factor inhibiting trade within Africa.

Industry and commerce Minister Mike Bimha said the conference gives an opportunity to stakeholders, to interact with experts on standards and standardisation, sharing ideas on how to improve the quality of goods as Africa embraces global trade and cultivate its industrialisation, transformation and integration through increased manufacturing, value addition and innovation.

"It is imperative that we adopt strategies that boost the productive capacity of our industries and build our capacity so as to develop manufactured products to export as we continue to negotiate market access bilaterally, regionally and at multilateral levels. We will need to rely on regional integration as a way forward to being part of a wider trade networks which will provide trading opportunities with other countries in other continent.

"The fundamental principles of the rules in the WTO agreements, strive for transparency, with the aim of eliminating barriers to trade. All this will promote economic growth and sustainable development and improving the living standards of the African peoples.

However, regional and multilateral economic integration is held back by a low degree of implementation and lack of information about existing regional agreements, inadequate legal frameworks, weak institutional capacity, under-developed markets and limited production of goods and services with export potential. These factors have resulted in insignificant Intra-regional trade amounting to 20 percent, compared to 61 percent in the EU. The absence of an efficient regional market with freedom for goods, services, capital and people undermines increased growth and investments," Bimha said.

"In order for Zimbabwe to take advantage of intra-regional trade, my Ministry is in the process of developing a new National Trade Policy for 2017-2021. This policy serve as guiding document towards future regional industrial and trade arrangements for the country which will ensure that it participates effectively in the changing regional and global economic environment. However, Zimbabwe remains seized with the downside risks of its vulnerability to regional and global economic markets shocks, since the development of Zimbabwe's trade and industrial policy has been and is intimately linked and influenced by its membership to regional organisations such as SADC, COMESA, WTO and the Economic Partnership Agreements," he added.

In a research done by Rosemary Mburu of the Institute of Trade in Nairobi, Kenya, it takes 28 days to move a container from port Shanghai, China to Mombasa, Kenya at a cost of US$600, while it takes 40 days for the same container to reach Bujumbura from Mombasa at a cost of US$8 00 which represents double the time at 13 times the cost.

Speaking at the conference, ZimTrade CEO, Sithembile Philime, said Africa needed to replicate trade mechanisms in other continents in order to realize value from intra Africa trade.

"Trade is dynamic and in order to be to be competitive, we need to be in touch with what is happening globally and also aim to be ahead in terms of addressing new needs as they arise," Pilime said.

Pilime buttressed the need to inculcate the culture of megatrends which are globally sustained macro-economic forces of development that impact on business, economy and society.

"Since megatrends are a permanent feature of business and economics, it is imperative that we in Africa, keep a close eye on them as we plan and execute our trading strategies," said Pilime.

She said, standards were also crucial in fostering investment in Africa as markets become standardized.

"Standards also make the characteristics of markets more transparent, in particular, for foreign producers and consumers and improve investment decisions," Pilime said.

Pilime said Africa should leverage on the growth of the services sector which constitute 70 percent of global GDP, 60 percent of global employment and 46 percent of global exports, measured in value added terms.
